Dear Bhargavi,

It is heartening to note that you are earnestly requesting me to allow some of your bright students along with a couple of faculty members to take part in the 107th Indian Science Congress being held at GKVK Campus, Bangalore, to obtain hands-on experience as communication and social media participants. I am sure your students are highly motivated and they are eager to learn more about this mega event and bring the proceedings to the public at large. You may give the names of the students and the faculty members forthwith.

Good wishes to you

Bahuroopi fest: Rangayana gets impetus of documentation

Besides repertory authorities, students are documenting the event

MYSURU, 04/05

Bahuroopi 2020, the national theatre festival of Rangayana-Mysuru, is getting the impetus of documentation. Besides the authorities of Rangayana, students are documenting all activities related to the festival as a war-torn.

Director of Rangayana

Abhinav Cariappa said that Bahuroopi is the flagship event of the repertory, but, so far, it did not fare well on the documentation front. "This year, we have concentrated on this aspect also. We are also using drone cameras to record the happenings during the six-day festival," he said.

In addition, students of the department of Media studies, from Bengaluru-based Jain

University, are camping in the city and are documenting the happenings on a daily basis. Sathish Kumar, Pallavi Kulakarni, Anusha, Bishika, Anshara, Varsha, Divya Akshay and Sagar are guided by associate professor Bhargavi D Hemmige, assistant professors Dilika Bhavya and K P Divya Kumar, and former CETHI scientist Sreenivasa Hariprasad.

The students are screenshotting pictures, video recording, talking to people, interviewing artists, celebrities and dignitaries. They are copying, editing reports, proof-reading, editing pictures and videos in their makeshift office at Koteera, on Rangayana premises.

Pallavi Kulakarni said that they are in Mysuru since February 13, the eve of the inauguration of Bahuroopi and will be here till February 20, a day after the valedictory, to document the activities of Rangayana.

They are bringing out an eight-page, bilingual, Kannada-English bulletin 'Bahuroopi' everyday. It is circulated free of cost at the information centre, every evening. They are screening a documentary film 'Gandhi Pathi', which they produced before coming to Rangayana. They are also bringing out a video bulletin on each day's events, from morning till evening, which is exhibited at the entrance of Bahuroopi during evening hours.

Pallavi Kulakarni said that she is interested in photography, but she is also doing reporting and editing of reports for 'Bahuroopi'.

"Bahuroopi is a lifetime experience. The real lights and shadow play is experienced on stage of theatre. It is a challenging situation and an excellent learning experience," she said.

Bishika said that as students, exposure of such events is significant. "We learn theory in classrooms. Documenting of Bahuroopi in their practical application. We learn about practical problems and benefits of team work here," she said.
